Introduction

Demographic data about Ontario's Metis and Non-Status Indian population has until the recent past been almost non-existent. While various estimates have been made about the total numbers of Metis and Non-Status Indians, information on their socio-economic characteristics has been negligible. This lack of demographic information has been a concern of both Native organizations and the various levels of government.

The Citizenship programs of Ontario's Ministry of Culture and Recreation, recognizing this problem, decided in 1978 to initiate field research in communities on a pilot basis. At that time there was no intention to undertake a major demographic study throughout Ontario. After research had been taken by MCR's Native Community Branch in several communities in the summer of 1978, it was decided that the project should be expanded into a province-wide survey. The decision to undertake this study represented the first of its kind to be conducted by the Native Community Branch and the Ontario government. The objectives of the research project were identified as follows:

1. to provide more accurate statistics on Metis and Non-Status Indians throughout Ontario;
2. to complement the demographic study with a profile of each community studied, with particular reference to resources;
3. to use the demographic data and community profiles to examine special need areas and to consider individual communities within a provincial perspective.

Research Methodology

The research was conducted during the period of October, 1978 to August, 1979 by a field researcher and seven summer students. Five regions comprising 66 communities were included in the survey. Communities studied had a population range from 30 to 80,000 and were a mix of urban and rural settings. While the vast majority of the communities studied are in Northern Ontario, some representation from Southern Ontario was included.

Within each of the 66 communities, an attempt was made to identify all Metis and Non-Status Indians (MNSI). Approaches were made to Metis Locals and other Native groups or known community leaders to develop a listing of all Metis and Non-Status people within each community. During the interviewing all respondents were asked to identify all other MNSI whom they knew. Interviewers then approached the individuals and repeated the process until contact was made with all known MNSI households in the particular locality. While contact was made with all known MNSI households, contact was not made with all the MNSI surveyed; information on the children was usually obtained from the head of the household.

During the interview information was collected on the following variables: age, sex, composition of household, educational achievement, social welfare, labor force status, and dwellings and facilities. All interviews were conducted in person and the interviewer was responsible for recording the data collected.

Since there are no clear and commonly accepted definitions of Metis and Non-Status Indians, respondents were included if they identified themselves as Metis or Non-Status Indians. Identification of the target population group was therefore based upon self-identification.

In addition to the demographic information collected, community profiles for each of the 66 localities were developed. These profiles include information on population size and location, communications, recreation and sports, transportation, housing, government and non-government services, community programs and developments, organizational affiliations and major employers.

Problems Related to Methodology

Prior to initiating the project as a formal province-wide survey, a pilot survey method was tested in several small communities in the Thunder Bay region. The pilot survey questionnaire was found acceptable for the entire study except that it was lacking questions regarding education. Questions regarding educational achievement were therefore added to the pilot questionnaire and this revised questionnaire became the standard survey instrument.

The use of the pilot questionnaire, without the question on education, resulted in the high incidence (27.7%) of non-reported data available for "educational achievement" for the Thunder Bay region. (It was impossible to return to the communities to collect the missing data because the individual data could not be matched with the existing data since complete anonymity had been insured.) From this point on, there was no further incident of significant non-reported data.

The second methodological problem relates to the study's time frame. The data was collected over a period of eleven months, from October, 1978 to August, 1979. The major problem resulting from this is the seasonal effect on employment. Seasonal change has a significant impact on employment figures and social assistance in many of the communities. Caution should therefore be exercised in comparing the unemployment rates of differing communities and regions. Employment and population data may have been affected by migration during the eleven-month research period. It should be noted, however, that while the research period covered eleven months, research in individual communities was completed in two days to three weeks time, depending upon the community's size.

Report Outline

The results of this research are presented in this publication in two parts. Part I presents the overall demographic data and analysis for the entire 66 communities, representing a total of 5,444 individuals. Part II of the publication provides the community profiles and the demographic data for individual communities. Within Part II, only those communities with more than five Metis and Non-Status Indian households were included; communities with five or fewer MNSI households are excluded. Of the 66 localities surveyed, 50 are presented in individual form. The remaining 16 are available on request from the Native Community Branch. Many of these 16 community profiles are also available in the Northern Ontario Directory, a publication of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

Part I includes the analysis of the demographic data, comparisons with other demographic information and statistical tables. These tables present a statistical analysis of the total population group on such factors as educational achievement, employment, social welfare assistance, and housing conditions. While these tables present all the data collected, there may be need for more detailed analysis or slightly different comparisons than the ones presented. Any requests for further analysis of the data should be submitted to the Native Community Branch.

While the analysis and tables refer only to the individuals surveyed and not the entire Metis and Non-Status Indian population, it is believed that the results of the survey are a fair representation of the demographic and socio-economic characteristics of the total population group. It is hoped that this data will make a contribution to the slowly developing body of information on Metis and Non-Status Indians in Ontario.

Definitions

Employment Definitions

Employed:
One who is working (other than for oneself) at a full-time or part-time job at the time of the interview.

Unemployed:
One who is not actively employed and does not fall under the category of housewife or self-employed.

Self-employed:
One who is receiving income by working for oneself at the time of the interview.

Housewife:

Education Definitions

Pre-School:
Usually ages 0-5 and prior to entering the formal education system.

Elementary:
Grades 1 to 8

Secondary:
Grades 9-13

College or University:
One who has completed a college or university program.

Other:
One who has one or more of the following: upgrading, retraining or apprenticeship, (etc).

No Education:
One who has received no formal education

Social Assistance Definitions

Welfare:
One who is receiving general welfare assistance at the time of the interview
(dependent children are not recorded as receiving welfare as only the head of household is recorded as a recipient)

Unemployment Insurance:
One who is receiving UIC benefits at time of interview
(recorded independently for each person)

Mothers Allowance
Disability Pension
Old Age Pension:
One who is receiving the benefit payments at the time of interview

Family Allowance:
One who is collecting Family Allowance payments at the time of interview
(recorded only once per household even if there is more than one child)

Housing Definitions

Household:
A person or group of persons occupying one dwelling, usually consisting of a family group.

Number of Rooms:
Total number of rooms per dwelling, excluding basement and bathroom.

Water:
The existence of running water in dwelling.
(the source could have been a private well or the municipal system)

Sewer:
The existence of a sewage system for the dwelling
(system could have been a private septic tank or part of the municipal sewage system)

Electricity:
The availability of electricity in dwelling

A Demographic and Socio-Economic Profile of Metis and Non-Status Indians

Demographic Characteristics

Population

The Metis and Non-Status Indian population in the five regions surveyed numbered 5,444. Rainy River and Kenora was the most surveyed region with 1,459 people, followed by Thunder Bay (1,392), Cochrane (1,064), Algoma and Sudbury (819) and Simcoe, Renfrew, Nipissing and Parry Sound (710). The differing regional totals do not necessarily reflect the actual MNSI population concentration since greater time was allocated to surveying communities in Northwestern Ontario.

Within the five regions there were eight communities with MNSI population exceeding 200 people of which Moosonee was the most populous.

Source: Tables A-1 and A-2
Note: Per cent may not add to total because of rounding.

There were 120 more females than males in the Metis and Non-Status Indian population of 5,444. The females surveyed outnumbered the males in four out of five regions. Only Algoma and Sudbury reported a higher proportion of males than females.

Age Structure

The Metis and Non-Status Indians studied were a young population. About 54.4 per cent of the total population was under 20 years. In comparison, only 34.2 per cent of Ontario's total population was in this age group. The working age population (20-64 years) numbered 2,300 or 42.3 per cent of the total while the elderly comprised the remaining 3.3 per cent.

The age structure has great implications in terms of the support that is required from the economically active adults in the population. The dependency ratios in Table 2 show that the number of children and elderly persons being supported by every hundred Metis and Non-Status working age adults is 137.

Households

There were 1,533 Metis and Non-Status Indian households contacted in this survey. Over half of the total households were located in just two regions — Rainy River and Kenora with 454 households and Thunder Bay with 379. Table 3 shows the average size of households by region, and also shows that there is little variation between the regions. The average number of persons per household was highest in the Simcoe, Renfrew, Nipissing and Parry Sound region and lowest in the Rainy River and Kenora region. Overall, the average household had 3.6 persons.

There were 2,863 children in these households during the research. These were children under 19 years of age who were living with their parents or guardians. They were classified in Table 4 into selected age groups that roughly correspond to pre-school age (under 6), elementary school age (6-15) and secondary school age (16-18). About one-quarter of the Metis and Non-Status children were in the pre-school age, another 58.6 per cent were in the elementary school age and the remaining 15 per cent were secondary school age.

Socio-Economic Characteristics

Educational Attainment

Table 5 illustrates the educational achievement of individuals by age group and sex. The past trends in educational achievement are indicated by the fact that 26.5 per cent of the elderly had no education and 53.6 per cent had only elementary level education. Of the 25-64 age group, 40.5 per cent had only elementary level education and only 3.5 per cent had received college or university education. The 20-24 age group had higher educational achievements, with 71.1 per cent completing some secondary schooling. It is noteworthy, however, that only 3.7 per cent of this group had received or is receiving college or university education.

It is interesting to note that there were no major differences in the educational achievement between men and women.

Employment Status

The employment status of individuals and members of households is an important indicator of the economic well-being of a community. Table 6 shows that, over-all, a third of the Metis and Non-Status households had no employed member at the time of the survey. Rainy River and Kenora had the highest proportion of households with no one working while the lowest proportion was in Algoma and Sudbury. On average, 43.0 per cent of the Metis and Non-Status households had a single earner while 23.6 per cent had two or more employed members.

The economic activity of persons aged 20 to 65 is shown in Table 7. Of the total number of persons in this age group, 1,646, or 70.1 per cent, were in the labor force, and 646, or 27.8 per cent, were housewives. Those not reporting their economic activity represented 1.4 per cent.

Reference: Table A-7
*Note: Unemployment as per cent of total labor force.

In this survey, the unemployed category consists of persons who were not gainfully employed at the time of the survey. The definition therefore differs from that of the Labor Force Survey (Statistics Canada) which includes only those without work and who were looking for work. Because of this difference, the unemployment rate in Tables 7, 7-A and 7-B should not be compared with the rates from the Labor Force Survey. Over-all, 23.1 per cent of the labor force was unemployed. The unemployment rate was highest in the Simcoe, Renfrew, Nipissing and Parry Sound region at 35.4 per cent and the lowest in Thunder Bay at 16.2 per cent.

Of the total employed, 94.2 per cent were salary and wage earners and the remaining 5.8 per cent were self-employed. The male salary and wage earners outnumbered their female counterparts by two to one and the ratio was three to one for the self-employed.

Table 7-A shows the unemployment rate of Metis and Non-Status Indians by age and sex. The unemployment rate was highest among those aged 50 to 65 at 33.6 per cent, followed by those aged 20-29 at 26.2 per cent. The lowest rate was among those aged 30-39 at 16.2 per cent. The unemployment rate for women was 5 per cent higher than for men.

Note: *Unemployment as per cent of total labor force.

A comparison of the unemployment rates for the various levels of educational achievement is presented in Table 7-B. The unemployment rate declines considerably as the level of education increases. Of those in the labor force with no formal schooling, the unemployment rate was 40 per cent. It should be noted, however, that the small sample size of this category means that the probability of error in the figure is much greater. In comparison, those with some secondary education had an unemployment rate of 21.2 per cent and those with college or university had a rate of 17.5 per cent.

Social Assistance

The utilization of social assistance is presented in Table 8 which shows that two out of every 100 Metis and Non-Status Indian population receive welfare assistance while three out of every 100 received unemployment insurance benefits. Family allowance went to 17 individuals per 100 population which is consistent with the high proportion of children in the population.

The percentage of households receiving social assistance is presented in Table 9 which shows that two-thirds of the households did not receive any social assistance benefits. In the table, social assistance includes welfare, unemployment insurance, mothers allowance, disability pension and old age pension, but excludes family allowances. Over-all, 23.4 per cent received one form of assistance and 8.9 per cent received two or more forms of assistance.

Dwellings by Tenure

There were considerable variations in the proportions of owned dwellings in the Metis and Non-Status Indian community. Algoma and Sudbury region had the lowest proportion of home-ownership and the highest tenancy rate while Simcoe, Renfrew, Nipissing and Parry Sound region had the highest rate of home ownership. Over-all, the proportion of households who owned their dwellings was 60.1 per cent in 1979.

Dwelling Size

The average size of dwelling of the Metis and Non-Status households in Ontario was 4.7 rooms. Among the five regions, Simcoe, Renfrew, Nipissing and Parry Sound region had the highest average of 5.5 rooms per dwelling and the Rainy River and Kenora region and Cochrane had the lowest at 4.5.

A measure of crowded dwellings is also presented in Table 11. A crowded dwelling is one in which the number of persons exceeds the number of rooms. Using the rough measure, none of the Metis and Non-Status dwellings were considered crowded since all dwellings had, on average, less than one person per room.

Household Services

The survey also provided an inventory of a variety of household services available to the Metis and Non-Status community such as the incidence of electricity, running water and sewage services. The availability of these services is an indicator of the living standards of the Metis and Non-Status Indians in Ontario.

On average, nine out of every 10 dwellings were serviced with electricity and running water. However, only eight out of 10 dwellings had sewers. Table 12 shows the availability of these services in five regions. For example, in Rainy River and Kenora region almost all dwellings had electricity but two out of every 10 dwellings still lacked sewers and running water.

Comparative Analysis

The literature on Metis and Non-Status Indians is very limited. Specifically, there are few studies of their demographic and socio-economic characteristics. While several federal government reports and working documents offer a general description of the socio-economic characteristics of this population group, little accurate statistical data is available for comparative purposes.

The most informative and first major demographic study of MNSI in Canada was conducted jointly by the Native Council of Canada (a national Native organization) and the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission between February and May 1976. Communities were selected through consultation with provincial Metis and Non-Status Indian organizations and the Native Council. The survey was conducted in 364 communities across Canada, and basic household information was gathered from 24,365 MNSI. Of this group, 14,370 persons of labor-force age were given a second interview regarding labor-market-related matters. Survey questionnaires were used to secure basic household information such as age, sex, and marital status, and labor market information such as educational achievement, employment, and training. The statistical analysis undertaken to date presents only the data at the national level. The following references to the NCC study are therefore reflective of national statistics, not provincial.

The Ontario Metis and Non-Status Indian Association (OMNSIA) conducted a demographic and labor force survey between June and July 1978. In selecting the communities to be surveyed, special attention was paid to communities where the association had strong locals. Of the 40 communities studied there was a mix of Urban / Rural, Small / Large and North / South. In total, 4,933 individuals were interviewed, representing 2,569 households. It should be noted, however, that of the 4,933 individuals, Metis and Non-Status Indians comprised only 76.6 per cent of the total. The remaining 24.4 per cent were either Status Indians or non-Native. The survey included information on variables such as age, sex, educational achievement, language, family income, employment and occupation. OMNSIA has completed an initial analysis and report on the data but a second report will provide a deeper analysis. The Association is unable to respond to general requests for copies of its first report.

Several federal government reports have included discussions of Metis and Non-Status Indians. The most recent include:

- Special ARDA in relation to the future direction of Native socio-economic development, DREE, 1977.

Total Population Size

Estimates of the total Metis and Non-Status Indian population in Ontario range from 50,000 to 185,000. While the Ontario Metis and Non-Status Indian Association claims to represent 185,000 individuals, federal government estimates have resulted in lower numbers.

In 1976, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, in consultation with Indian and Northern Affairs, Employment and Immigration Commission and Native organizations, estimated a population of 50,000 to 70,000.[1] The Department of the Secretary of State based their 1978 estimated on the best available information from federal government sources and the Native organizations and produced a population figure of 90,000.[2] In the same year, the Employment and Immigration Commission produced an estimated population of 50,000 based on estimates by Regional Manpower Directorates in consultation with Metis and Non-Status Indian Associations.[3]

Since the above population figures are simply estimates, and none of the existing demographic studies have attempted to determine the total size of the Native ancestry population, there is still no basis for determining the actual number of MNSI in Ontario. It would appear, however, based upon the above estimates, that the MNSI population represents between .6 and 2.2 per cent of Ontario's population.

Age / Sex Structure

The existing studies confirm that the MNSI population is a young population. The Native Council of Canada (NCC) Study found that 56 per cent[4] of the Metis population was under 20 years of age and the Native Community Branch (NCB) Study found 54.4 per cent in the same population group as compared to 34.2 per cent for the general Ontario population.[5] The elderly (those 65 years and over) were found in both the NCC and NCB studies to represent slightly over 3 per cent of the population as compared to 9 per cent for the Ontario population generally.[6] Both the OMNSIA study and the NCB study revealed a slightly higher percentage of females than males, with females representing approximately 51 per cent of the population.

Dependency Ratios

Dependency ratios are indicative of the number of children and elderly persons being supported by the working-age MNSI. The research indicates that MNSI people of working age, in comparison to the general population of Ontario, have large numbers of dependents. While the dependency ratio for MNSI is 1.4[7] according to the NCC study, and 1.3 according to the NCB research, the over-all Ontario ratio is .76.[8]

Family size

Two of three studies indicate that Metis and Non-Status Indians have a family size similar to Ontario's average. While the Ontario average was 3.4 persons per family in 1978,[9] the NCB study calculated an average family size of 3.6 persons. While the report on the NCC research does not include an average family size, internal analysis of the raw Ontario data resulted in family size of 3.6.[10] In contrast to this data, the OMNSIA study produced an average size of household of 2.35.[11]

Educational Attainment

The educational achievement of the MNSI population, as compared to the general Ontario population, is significantly low. Almost one-third of Ontario's labor force population has completed some post-secondary education, whereas both the NCC and NCB study found that less than 5 per cent of the MNSI labor force population had reached similar levels. The OMNSIA research found that of those in the labor force, only 2.1 per cent had completed grade 13.[12]

The low level of educational achievement for the MNSI population is also indicated by the higher percentage of individuals having grade 8 or less education. Both the NCC and NCB research found that over 40 per cent of the population had eight years or less of schooling, as compared to 22.7 per cent for the general Ontario population.[13]

Highest Level Achieved	*NCC Study[14] Canada	*NCB Study Ontario	*Ontario[15] Population
No Schooling	4.2⟩49.8	4.7⟩42.0
Elementary	45.6	37.3	22.7
Secondary	47.7	53.0	46.6
Post Secondary	2.5	4.9	30.7
TOTAL	100.0	100.0	100.0

*15 Years of Age and Over

Employment Status

Two of the three studies indicated that the unemployment rates were fairly high. The OMNSIA study did not, however, provide comparable unemployment data. The NCC's report presents an over-all unemployment rate of approximately 33 per cent[16] but this rate includes those 65 years and over. This study points out a higher unemployment rate for women than for men, and shows that the age group suffering the highest unemployment was the age group 14 to 19, with a rate of 54.5 per cent, followed by the 45 to 64 age group with a rate of 31.7 per cent. In comparison, the NCB research produced an over-all unemployment rate of 23.1 per cent. Possible reasons for the discrepancy include differing definitions of the labor force, differing time periods for the research, and the fact that the NCC research was across Canada while the NCB study was restricted to Ontario.

Despite the variance in the unemployment rates between the two studies, both illustrate that the MNSI population faces a high rate of unemployment. While comparisons of these unemployment rates with Ontario's over-all rate are not completely valid because of differing methodologies, it is clear that Ontario's unemployment rate of 7.0 per cent in 1977 and 7.2 per cent in 1978 is significantly lower than the MNSI rate.[17]

Housing

Neither the NCC or OMNSIA study included information on household services or dwelling characteristics. According to the NCB study, the MNSI population had a slightly lower rate of home ownership than the Ontario average, with 60.1 per cent as compared to 65.5 per cent owning their homes.[18] It would also appear that the MNSI population lives in smaller homes and more crowded conditions than the general population. The Ontario average number of rooms per dwelling in 1978 was 5.6,[19] as compared to 4.7 for the MNSI population. While 29.3 per cent[20] of Ontario's households had seven or more rooms per dwelling, only 10.9 per cent of the MNSI households had dwellings of this size. Greater numbers of MNSI had small homes, as evidenced by the fact that 17 per cent had three or fewer rooms per dwelling, as compared to 11.9 per cent for Ontario.[21] Finally, the MNSI population had an average of .76 persons per room, while the equivalent Ontario average was .54.[22]

Conclusion

The major social indicators used in this study confirm that Metis and Non-Status Indians within Ontario are a significantly disadvantaged population group. One reason may be the age structure of the population which is characterized by 20 per cent more individuals in the 0-19 age bracket than in the same cohort for Ontario as a whole (54.4 versus 34.2 per cent respectively). This youth-oriented age structure of the MNSI creates a dependency ratio which is 80 per cent larger than that of the population as a whole in Ontario.

Education and employment, two important socio-economic variables, clearly delineate the significant differences between MNSI and the general population. Almost one-third of the Ontario population has post-secondary education. By comparison, only 5 per cent of the Ontario MNSI had such education. The number of MNSI with little or no elementary schooling was almost double that of the Ontario population as a whole (42 versus 23 per cent respectively).

The NCB research found that 23 per cent of the MNSI working-age population was not gainfully employed at the time of the survey. The Native population which is employed is working in predominantly salary / wage positions (94 per cent) and hence is directly affected by higher levels of unemployment in the economy as a whole.

In spite of these and other social indicators which describe the low socio-economic position of the MNSI, our survey did produce findings which counterbalance the above. Although 26.5 per cent of MNSI people over the age of 65 had no education, only 1.1 per cent of the 20-24 age group had no formal schooling. Of the total MNSI population surveyed, 60 per cent of all households owned their dwellings. Lastly, more than two-thirds of all MNSI households received no form of social assistance.

INTRODUCTION

The Ministry of Culture and Recreation, through the Native Community Branch, undertook a demographic study of Metis and Non-Status Indians in Ontario during the period of October, 1978 to August, 1979. Five regions comprising 66 communities, and over 5,000 Metis and Non-Status Indians (MNSI) were included in the survey. The objectives of the research were identified as follows:

1. to provide more accurate statistics on Metis and Non-Status Indians throughout Ontario;
2. to complement this demographic study with a profile of each community studied, with particular reference to resources;
3. to use demographic data and community profiles to examine special need areas and to consider individual communities within a provincial perspective.

In addition to the demographic information collected, community profiles for each of the 66 localities were developed. These profiles include information on transportation, housing, government and non-government services, community programs and developments, organizational affiliations, major employers, and the MNSI population. Part II of the publication provides the community profiles and the demographic data for individual communities. Only those communities with more than five Metis and Non-Status Indian households were included. Of the 66 localities surveyed, 50 are presented in individual form; the remaining 16 are available on request from the Native Community Branch. Many of these community profiles are also available in the Northern Ontario Directory, a publication of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

Part I of the publication includes the analysis of the demographic data and comparisons with other demographic studies. Statistical tables present an analysis of the total population group on such factors as educational achievement, employment, social welfare assistance, and housing conditions.

Community Developments

Atikokan is a mining town with two open-pit mines called Steep Rock Iron Mines Limited and Caland Oil Company. Due to a decrease in the mining industry on a local level repercussions are being experienced with closure of the two mines.

New Subdivision - Northdale, planned for near future

New Sewage Treatment Plant is presently under construction

- it has been designed to intercept all existing settling tanks and ship the water to the sewage treatment plant;
- total capacity at completion will be 6,500 people plus

Major road improvements are in progress and the construction of a bridge over the river

Community Developments

St. Mary's Redevelopment Project: Presently the Great Lakes Power Corporation Ltd. generates 220,000 kilowatts but the total demand on the system peaks at 350,000 kilowatts; project is intended to increase the present generation capacity and minimize the amount of power that must be purchased; to accomplish this, a two-stage construction program was developed and final stage is planned for the summer of 1982.
